KNOXVILLE March 11.—This evening a shooting affray occured between James W. Wallace, editor of the Tribune, and Wm. Rule, editor of the Chronicle. The Chronicle this morning contained an article charging the Tribute with publishing a sensational article and then lying out of it. It also branded the editors of the Tribune as cowardly puppies. Wallace met Rule on the street this evening and demanded a retraction. Rule refused, and struck Wallace over the head with a cane, and orew back to strike again, when Wallace drew a revolver and shot at Rule twice, the powder burning the latter's face. Rule fell, but was not hurt, and ran into a store. Wallace walked off. He afterward gave himself up and furnished
